Growth promotes RNA-dependent RNA polymerase activity for translation in yeast mitochondria. As a part of the transcription-translation coupling mechanism in yeast mitochondria, the cytoplasmic RNA-dependent RNA polymerase Rpb1 is a candidate to interact with mitochondrial transcripts. Here, we report that growth conditions which promote mitochondrial protein translation lead to Rpb1-dependent elongation of mitochondrial mRNAs, suggesting that Rpb1 participates in translation of the mitochondrial genome. The levels of Rpb1 increase in growing cells and increase over time of stationary phase, coincident with the stimulation of translation of mitochondrial transcripts. These results suggest that the mitochondrial translation rate in yeast might be regulated by the level of Rpb1.
